Lindsay graduated from Towson University in 2008 after completing her Bachelor of Science and Master of Science in Occupational Therapy. She worked three years as a full-time school-based Occupational Therapist and provided services for children from birth to age 12. She worked specifically in programs designed for toddlers and preschoolers with multiple intense needs and with children in an academic life skills program. Lindsay's areas of expertise and special interest include Autism Spectrum Disorders, Sensory Processing Disorders and Sensory Integration Dysfunction, Developmental Delays, Learning Disorders, ADHD/ADD, Cerebral Palsy, Down's Syndrome, Angelman's Syndrome, William's Syndrome, cognitive impairments, prematurity, and other neurological and genetic conditions. She is trained in the administration of the "Handwriting Without Tears" program for Pre-K children and has attended workshops on "Brain Gym" and "The Alert Program: How Does Your Engine Run?" She also received the Maryland State Department of Education Certification for Infants and Toddlers from ages birth to three and has experience with Applied Behavior Analysis (ABA) and behavior modification techniques. Lindsay was recognized all three years by the Special Education Community Advisory Committee (SECAC) receiving a Certificate of Appreciation from parent and family nominations for her dedication to the students and families she worked with. She assisted in the development of a presentation on the therapeutic uses of the Nintendo Wii in treatment sessions and co-presented on this topic at the Maryland Occupational Therapy Association's 29th Annual Conference. She understands the role of technology in today's world and strives towards developing creative ways to incorporate technology into therapy sessions when appropriate. Lindsay is truly passionate for helping children to perform and achieve at their optimal level of functioning, as well as working with families to foster independence and provide meaningful developmentally appropriate activities within their home environment.

Lindsay is a member of the American Occupational Therapy Association (AOTA) and the Maryland Occupational Therapy Association (MOTA). Lindsay is licensed in the state of Maryland and has satisfied the Certification Requirements for the Credential of Occupational Therapist Registered OTR with a Practice Area of Emphasis in Pediatrics. She is in the process of working towards earning the AOTA Board Certification in the area of Pediatrics.
